CARLISLE'S BLINDNESS.

Regarding the order of Carlisle to close the Carson Mint. The Salt Lake Tribune says:

We take it as an indication that Mr. Cleveland's old antipathy to silver is still to be continued, and that Congress will have a hard time to try to stand the old man off. The reason that the coinage of silver is to cease is given to be that there is no call for that kind of money. Put that sentence against, first, the declaration of the Constitution that the money of the United States shall be gold and silver; then put against the words of a United States Senator, spoken in this city a few months ago, that in the South they never saw any coin; then add to that the words of the shopmen in New York who the other day, when a Salt Lake man made a slight purchase in his establishment, and in payment tendered a ten-dollar piece, received his change in greasy and torn paper money, whereupon he asked if he could not give him silver money. The merchant's reply was: "We very seldom get any silver, and when we do we save it as a curiosity." Now, we say with that state of facts, starting with such a Constitution as ours, remembering that under the legislation of this country, which demonetized silver at a time when silver in this country was worth more than gold, we repeat that with that statement of facts, the announcement of the Secretary of the Treasury that there is no use for silver dollars in our country is such a confession of imbecility on the part of the men who have been law-makers in our country for the last twenty years, as was never made before. The Eastern people are absolutely blind, and so, it is pitiful to read of failures of banks and of trust companies, and to know that innocent depositors are losing their money, there is a comfort behind it, because it is a certain proof that the disease is so severe that only drastic remedies will avail, and only by tears will the films be washed from the eyes of the Eastern people so that they can see things aright. They will begin to coin silver again soon and the people will begin to use it very soon, or there will be such a collapse in business, such universal bankruptcy and chaos, as will make our free people seem more like lunatics than like sensible men.

Family Bones to Pick.

There has been trouble in a fashionable home on Geary street, somewhere in the 900 block. The family referred to is that of a prominent man well known in commercial circles. He and his wife have had several stormy scenes lately, and the neighbors talk about a skeleton and the shadow of a by-gone cloud. The other evening, at dinner, words passed between the master and the mistress of the mansion, and the latter arose and left the table in a passion. Mr. —, the husband, was inclined to be facetious. Taking up a small bone, he gave it to his five-year-old daughter, with the remark: "Here, Pussy, take this to your mother and tell her it is a bone for her to pick."

The artless little maiden delivered the message, Madame glowed with anger and rage, and blurted out: "Go back to the man downstairs and tell him he is not your father, and that is a bone for him to pick!" —Wasp.

On the subject of "Memorial Day" the Report has this to say: "Memorial Day is rapidly becoming a day of picnics, pleasure excursions and gatherings for sport, nor can the Grand Army check the drift of things in this direction. Another generation has taken charge since 1865, and it 'knows not Joseph.' But the veterans may feel sure, as we do, that our boys will not be less ready than they were to respond to the call of arms, should it ever come to them. They would not be boys, but something different, and not nearly so promising, if they preferred on a bright and sunny day in May, a morose march to a cemetery rather than cricket, baseball, yachting, bicycling, football and the rest."
